The village of Fodele is almost 30 kilometers from Heraklion and is located in the middle of a valley overgrown with orange groves. It flows from the Pantomantris river and is famous for its delicious oranges and citrus fruits in general. Its inhabitants are engaged in agriculture and less in animal husbandry. Fodele is a rural village known for the El Greco Museum, which exhibits replicas of works by Renaissance artist Domenikos Theotokopoulos (also known as El Greco) in the small house where he is believed to have been born. The interior of the Church of Virgine Fodele from the Byzantine era is covered with frescoes, while the Monastery of Agios Panteleimonas contains various icons from the 17th century. The visitor can browse the beautiful square of the village and taste the famous Fodelian oranges while relaxing in one of the taverns with the centuries-old plane trees and the busts of Domenikos Theotokopoulos. Nature lovers, on the other hand, can follow a beautiful route through the greenery and next to the river.
